QUESTION

Do you guys just record all your games hoping something cool will happen?

self.battlefield_one submitted 5 hours ago by war_walrus

Noob question here: I've never recorded my games before and I'm wondering how you guys do it. Should I just record everything and sit through hours of watching myself suck until something awesome happens?

I dropped mine down to the last minute and find it much more manageable. Could probably get away with last 20 seconds tbh.

Prerecord. Software automatically records the last x minutes of gameplay.

If something cool happens, you press a button and it saves all the footage.

For xbox 1, you simply double-tap the xbox button on the controller and press X and it records the last 30 seconds. You can also turn game DVR on to record longer stretches of time.

You can also choose the length of time it saves from the settings: 30 seconds. 45 seconds. 1 minute. 3 minutes. 5 minutes.

And if you have a Kinect you just say "Xbox record that" to save a video. If you don't have a Kinect, but wear a mic you can

Plays.tv

Records automatically and when something neat happens, press ctrl f2 and it makes a bookmark.

Exit your game session and you find the bookmark and make a clip. It automatically deletes footage when it runs out of the space you allot it.

I believe both PS4 and Xbox One have replay features. I don't own either of those so don't quote me on it.

On the PC side, nVidia's Shadowplay and AMD's ReLive softwares both have recording and replay features.

On Xbox you have the option of going back and recording everything that's happened in the last few minutes (up to 5 min I believe). So when something cool happens, we just record back to a little bit before that thing happened
